Moreover, hardly a day passes, but what we hear or read of some fine cow or valuable horse or promising young coit, that has been entangled and cut almost to death, in a wire fence. The wire fence has its advantages however, and many will use it. The next alternation is the hedge. In all old countries like England and France the hedge has become almost the only fence used. It forms a living barrier to all intruders and when kept in proper subjection by timely and regular trimming—which after all is not so expensive as repairing other fences, it is the safest, the cheapest and the most satisfactory of all fences. Now, this is the trouble with some people. They always overdo their arguments. Tell me, does the average American woman owe her health to abstinence from smoking? If she does, then in heaven's name let her buy a pipe and a pound of tobacco and learn to smoke. Any change in the health of the American woman, it seems to me, would be for the better. Do the women of America enjoy better health than the men? It seems to me that the anti-smoker was unfortunate in his selection of an example. Do the men fade out at thirty-five, and look old at forty, and fizzle clear away at fifty? Go to. Give us better arguments against the cigar than this, or the wooden indian will continue to do a rushing business at the same old stand. -An Early Bird.-When Mr. Geo. W. Bradstreet's report of the tobacco crop of Tennessee, Says: A general increased acreage was reported from this State, and with favorable weather the yield woeld have been equal to that of last year. The damaging drouth, however, which extended through this district reduced the good prospects considerably. Late rains did some good, but the general opinion seems to be that only a fair average crop can be gathered if frost does not intervene. A good deal of the crop was cut prematurely in consequence of dry-weather ripening. More complaint comes from this State than from Kentucky of damage by the abovermentioned causes, and the production this year in Tennessee will prohably be less comparatively than in the former State. The weather for curing is very good, and the tobacco will vary in weight from 550 to 700 pounds per acre.
